The Get of Toby II's Patchy No. 1439

Late this winter Toby II's Patchy returned to his native state of Idaho at the age of 14 years. He stood in the northwest as a young stud, then in U. S. and moving to New England. A winter time move two years ago took him to southern California via the deep south. He has had a total of eight owners and the average of his various sale prices is a four figure price—something few stallions maintain over a long period of time.

He was sired by Toby II #113 out of a mare sired by Patchy #416, who was a "kissin' cousin" of the Toby family. Of all the aged Toby stallions remaining, he is most like his grand-sire, the immortal Toby I.

A study of his get, as the accompanying photos show, draws some interesting parallels of value to breeders who plan their matings carefully.

Only two of his sons are shown to give more space to succeeding generations. They are B. O. Poco Patch and Toby II's Patchy's Cochise. Cochise was out of Morgan's Papyrus, a Dan Morgan bred mare from Montana by Leopard Cortez.

A full brother to Cochise sired Domino Speckled Prince, who is the sire of Sunrise Little Beaver, Little Beaver reverted more to the Toby color pattern.

Cochise was mated several times to Livin Doll, a great-granddaughter of Morgan's Cheetah who was a half sister to his dam Morgan's Papyrus. Cheetah produced Simcoes Sarcee (by Simcoe's Chinook, who goes back to old Knobby without a Toby or Patchy sire in his pedigree), the sire of Simcoe's Secoma (out of the dam of Storm Cloud F and Simcoe's Chinook), who was the sire of Livin Doll.

When drawn out, this is a rather impressive pedigree, and the results bear out the reading of the record.

Two of these Cochise-Livin Doll produce are Livin Doll's Bunny and Elmer Gantry. Two more typical Appaloosas would be hard to find. These animals do have class and refinement which was developed within the breed rather than going outside as many do, and thereby eclipse of full-blown Appaloosa character.

This breeding program blends the Toby cross with Dan Morgan leopard bloodlines. Similar successful series could be made with Toby studs and Red Eagle, Patchy and Apache bloodline mares.

Toby II's Patchy now has his headquarters at Bert Russell's ranch at Harrison, Idaho, and serves as a back-up stud for selected matings for the Toby Breeder's Association.
